RAF Museum Research Programme 2018

In anticipation of the Centenary of the Royal Air Force in 2018, the RAF Museum seeks proposals from postgraduate students, early-career and established researchers for our annual Research Programme.

Our Research Programme consists of three lecture series: The Trenchard Lectures in Air Power Studies held in conjunction with the Royal Aeronautical Society in London and the University of Wolverhampton in the Midlands; The First World War in the Air Lunchtime Lectures at RAF Museum London; and The Cold War Lunchtime Lectures at RAF Museum Cosford.

For 2018, the theme for The Trenchard Lectures is the first 100 years of the RAF, and we invite proposals on this subject broadly defined. As well as their specific themes, each series aims to examine air power in its broadest sense encompassing not only the history of air warfare and the RAF, but also related fields such as archaeology, international relations, strategic studies, law and ethics, and museology.

If you are interested in delivering a lecture, please send a title, 300-word abstract of your proposed paper and a one-page CV to the Museum's Historian, Dr Ross Mahoney (ross.mahoney@rafmuseum.org) by Friday 1 September 2017. Please also indicate to which series your proposal is linked.
